Program Delivery Types

While courses may utilize different delivery modes, each program is approved to be offered via a specific delivery type. Program delivery types are defined below.

In-person Program. All courses in this program delivery type are offered in-person. Online courses may be available to students enrolled in an in-person program and will count toward program completion. However, no exclusively online courses are required for program completion with the exception of internship, clinical and similar experiential learning courses.

Hybrid Program. Some courses are offered in-person only, and some courses are only offered online. Students enrolled in a hybrid program will be required to take both in-person and online courses. Hybrid programs are approved as a majority online, or a majority in-person.

Online Program. All courses in this program delivery type are offered online. No in-person courses are required for program completion. Required experiential learning activities such as internships or clinical practicums may be part of an online program.

Changes in Program Delivery. Changes in the course composition of a hybrid, on-ground, or online program require approval by the appropriate university committees, and may require SACSCOC notification or approval.
